

Reasonably Prudent Operator or Good and Workmanlike Manner: Does Your Contract Have the Right Standard of Care?

Parker A. Lee, Ming Lei, and Dominique J. Torsiello
McDermott Will & Emery LLP

The standard of care is an important provision in any operating, management or services agreement because it sets forth the expectations of the parties as to how the contract should be carried out. It also functions as the benchmark by which the service provider's performance under the contract will be measured. Parties on both sides of the table should have a clear understanding of what the standard of performance is under the contract and how it applies to the services provided.

In commercial contracts for energy industry operations, two different standards of care appear most often: the "reasonably prudent operator" standard and the "good and workmanlike manner" standard. In some cases, there seems to be a misunderstanding of what the two standards mean and sometimes the standards are being applied interchangeably. This article explains the difference between the two standards and why they should not be viewed as interchangeable or redundant across all energy industry commercial contracts.

WHAT ARE THE STANDARDS OF CARE?

Good and Workmanlike Manner - In the general sense, "good and workmanlike manner" means the quality of work performed by one who has the knowledge, training or experience necessary for the successful practice of a trade or occupation and performed in a manner that is generally considered proficient by those capable of judging such work. "Workmanlike" may also be defined as the degree of care that a skilled workman (gender inclusive) would exercise under similar circumstances in the community in which the work is done. Whether work is completed in a good and workmanlike manner is a determination for the factfinder to decide in any litigation.

Reasonably Prudent Operator - The "reasonably prudent operator" standard is seen most commonly in cases involving the development or operation of an oil and gas or mineral lease. As an objective standard, it establishes not only the performance of the obligations, but also whether there is an obligation to begin with (e.g., a lessee's decision to drill or not to drill). Under the reasonably prudent operator standard, the lessee or operator is obligated to make reasonable efforts to develop the interest for the common advantage of both the lessor and lessee. However, some courts have recognized that a lessee or operator's obligation to develop is not unlimited in the sense that it is not mandated to undertake development operations that are unprofitable.

Generally speaking, the implied covenants of a reasonably prudent operator standard include the duty to develop, the duty to protect against drainage, the duty to market and the duty to conduct operations with reasonable care and due diligence. The consideration as to whether someone is acting as a reasonably prudent operator requires the factfinder to consider the cost of development operations and the economic viability therefrom and whether an ordinarily prudent person would have done the same in similar circumstances. Courts look to the totality of the circumstances and various factors to determine whether an operator has met its development duty, including geological data, the number and location of wells, productive capacity of wells, costs of drilling compared to the profit reasonably expected, time intervals between completion of the last well, and demand for additional operations and lease acreage.

Given the high concentration of commercial contracts providing operations and services related to oil and gas, heavy infrastructure, petrochemicals and, increasingly, renewable energy projects located in Texas and Louisiana, the competing standards are examined through the lens of the laws of those two states.

A. TEXAS LAW

Good and Workmanlike Manner - “Texas law ‘define[s] good and workmanlike as that quality of work performed by one who has the knowledge, training, or experience necessary for the successful practice of a trade or occupation and performed in a manner generally considered proficient by those capable of judging such work.’” Shakeri v. ADT Sec. Services, Inc., 816 F.3d 283, 296 n.2 (5th Cir. 2016) (quoting Melody Home Mfg. Co. v. Barnes, 741 S.W.2d 349, 354 (Tex. 1987)). The good and workmanlike manner is treated as an implied warranty, which is “created by operation of law and are grounded more in tort than in contract.” Continental Dredging, Inc. v. De-Kaizerred, Inc., 120 S.W.3d 380, 391 (Tex. App. – Texarkana) (quoting La Sara Grain Co. v. First Nat’l Bank, 673 S.W.2d 558, 565 (Tex. 1984)). The implied warranty of “good and workmanlike manner” does not require the repairmen to “guarantee the results of their work,” but rather only “perform those services in a good and workmanlike manner.” Melody, 741 S.W. 2d at 355 (emphasis in original).

This standard is also treated as a “gap filler” warranty that implies terms into a contract that fails to describe how the party or service is to perform. Although the parties cannot disclaim this warranty outright, an express warranty in their contract can fill the gaps covered by the implied warranty “and supersede it if the express warranty specifically describes the manner, performance or quality of the services.” Gonzalez v. Sw. Olshan Found. Repair Co., LLC, 400 S.W.3d 52, 59 (Tex. 2013) (emphasis added). For example, in Gonzalez, [T]he parties agreed that [Southwest] Olshan [Foundation Repair Co., LLC] would perform the work in a good and workmanlike manner, would use the Cable Lock foundation repair system, and would adjust the foundation for the life of the home if the foundation settled. This express warranty sufficiently describes the manner, performance and quality of the services so as to supersede the implied warranty.

Id. Based on this precedent set by the Supreme Court of Texas, even if an agreement utilizes the term “good and workmanlike standard,” if the underlying agreement “sufficiently describes” the manner, performance and quality of the services, the terms of the agreement supersede the implied warranty of the good and workmanlike standard and instead becomes an express warranty. See e.g., Design Tech Homes, Ltd. v. Maywald, 2013 WL 2732068 at *5, (Tx. App. – Beaumont, June 13, 2013, pet. denied) (mem.op.)).

In a Texas agreement, if the parties wish to establish a standard of care different from that of the “knowledge, training, or experience necessary for the successful practice of a trade or occupation and performed in a manner generally considered proficient by those capable of judging such work,” they may find it advantageous to set forth the specific manner, performance and quality of the services that are to be provided. In such an instance, by sufficiently setting forth the manner, performance and quality of the services that will be provided under an agreement, the parties can eliminate ambiguity that may arise in any future litigation between. If the parties elect to include such language, it should be clear, measurable and directly applicable to the services performed under the agreement if such language is to have a meaningful impact.

Reasonably Prudent Operator - In Texas, a reasonably prudent operator is an objective standard where the factfinder will decide whether the operator’s acts or omissions are like that of a reasonably prudent operator under the same or similar circumstances. The reasonably prudent operator, having an expectation of profit, must act in good faith, with competence and with due regard to the interests of the lessor and its own interests. Exxon Corp. v. Miesch, 180 S.W.3d 299, 323 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi-Edinburg 2005) (reversed on other grounds) (citing Hurd Enters. v. Bruni, 828 S.W.2d 101,109 n.10 (Tex. App. – San Antonio 1992, writ denied).

In reviewing Texas case law, the reasonably prudent operator standard appears to be applied in the context of mineral leases most of the time. In fact, “[e]very claim of improper operation by a lessor against a lessee should be tested against the general duty of the lessee to conduct operations as a reasonably prudent operator in order to carry out the purpose of the oil and gas lease.” Amoco Prod. Co. v. Alexander, 622 S.W.2d 563 (Tex. 1981).

Where a lease agreement includes a requirement, “to drill such offset well or wells on said lands ... as a reasonably prudent operator would drill under the same or similar circumstances’ – expressly adopts the reasonably prudent operator standard.” Mzyk v. Murphy Exploration & Prod. Co. – USA, 2017 WL 2797479 at *3 (Tex. App. – San Antonio 2017) (citing Good v. TXO Prod. Corp., 763 S.W.2d 59, 61 (Tex. App. – Amarillo 1988, writ denied) (reaching the same conclusion about identical language in a similar lease provision). In Grayson v. Crescendo Resources, L.P., 104 S.W.3d 736 (Tx. App. – Amarillo 2003), the plaintiffs filed suit based upon the defendant’s alleged failure to act as a reasonably prudent operator in developing an oil and gas lease. The court recognized that where a lessee’s obligation to develop is not specifically addressed, the law implies a covenant to reasonably develop the premises. “The lessee’s duty under that covenant is to act as a reasonably prudent operator under the same or similar circumstances.” Grayson, 104 S.W.3d at 739 (citing Amoco Prod. Co. v. Alexander, 622 S.W.2d 563, 567-68 (Tex. 1981)).

In conjunction with the reasonably prudent operator analysis, Texas courts are expected to use this standard to determine whether an exculpatory clause in an agreement should bar or limit a plaintiff's claim. Where a contract's exculpatory clause specifies that the operator "shall conduct and direct and have full control of all operations on the Contract Area" and "shall conduct all such operations in a good and workmanlike manner..." Texas intermediate appellate courts have uniformly found the phrase "all such operations" referred back to "operations on the Contract Area," and held that the exculpatory clause was limited to the operator's activities at the wellsite and did not extend to other breaches of the agreement. MDU Barnett Ltd. P'ship v. Chesapeake Exploration Ltd. P'ship, 2014 WL 585740 at *7 (S.D. Texas, Feb. 14, 2014) (citing IP Petro. Co. v. Wevanco Energy, LLC, 116 S.W.3d 888, 895 (Tex. App. – Houston 2003, pet. denied) and Cone v. Fagadau Energy Corp., 68 S.W.3d 147, 155 (Tex. App. – Eastland 2001, pet. denied)). "The operator's limitation of liability is linked directly to imposition of the duty to act as a prudent operator, which strictly concerns the manner in which the operator conducts drilling operations on the lease," explained a Texas appellate court. Id. (quoting Abraxas Petro. Corp. v. Hornburg, 20 S.W.3d 741, 759 (Tex. App. – El Paso 2000, no pet.)).

More recently, in March 2021, a Texas Court of Appeals similarly held that an exculpatory clause, and those comparable to it, "exempt[ ] the operator from liability for its activities unless its liability-causing conduct is due to gross negligence or willful misconduct." Crimson Exploration Operating, Inc. v. BPX Operating Co., 2021 WL 786541 at *4 (Tex. App. – Houston, March 2, 2021).

B. LOUISIANA LAW

Good and Workmanlike Manner - While Louisiana courts have not adopted a universal definition for the term "workmanlike," courts have applied an objective industry standard. "As a general rule, there is implied in every contract for work or services that the work will be performed in a skillful, careful, diligent and good workmanlike manner." Hogan Exploration, Inc. v. Monroe Eng'g Assocs., Inc., 430 So.2d 696, 700 (La. App. 2d Cir. 1983) (citations omitted).

Significantly, a contractor is not responsible for defects caused by faulty or insufficient specifications furnished to the contractor. Peterson Contractors, Inc. v. Herd Producing Co., Inc. 811 So. 2d 130, 133 (La. App. 2d Cir. 2002) (citing La. R. S. 9:2711; Tex-La Props. v. S. State Ins. Co., 514 So. 2d 707 (La. App. 2 Cir. 1987)). "If the defect in construction is caused by faulty or insufficient plans or specifications, the contractor is immune from liability upon constructing compliance therewith, provided the specifications are not provided by him." Id.

In Louisiana, "implicit in every building contract is the requirement that the work shall be performed in a good, workmanlike manner, free from defects in material and workmanship." Lewis v. La Adrienne, Inc., 17 So. 3d 1007 (La. App. 2d Cir. 2009) (citing to Cascio v. Henry Hayes Carpet, 968 So. 2d 844 (La. App. 2d Cir. 2007) (Mount Mariah Baptist Church v. Pannell's Associated Electric, Inc., 835 So. 2d 880 (La. App. 2d Cir. 2002))). "The contractor is liable for failure to perform properly.” Id. (citing La. C. C. art. 2769). Louisiana Revised Statute § 9:2771 provides:

No contractor, including but not limited to a residential building contractor as defined in R.S. 37:2150.1(9), shall be liable for destruction or deterioration of or defects in any work constructed, or under construction, by him if he constructed, or is constructing, the work according to plans or specifications furnished to him which he did not make or cause to be made and if the destruction, deterioration, or defect was due to any fault or insufficiency of the plans or specifications. This provision shall apply regardless of whether the destruction, deterioration, or defect occurs or becomes evident prior to or after delivery of the work to the owner or prior to or after acceptance of the work by the owner. The provisions of this Section shall not be subject to waiver by the contractor.

The good and workmanlike standard is more general than the statute. In Louisiana, “[a] contractor is obligated to perform the work in a good and workmanlike manner so that the work is suitable for its intended purpose and free from defects in material and workmanship.” Lewis v. La Adrienne, Inc., 17 So. 3d 1007 (La. App. 2d Cir. 2009) (citing to Cascio v. Henry Hayes Carpet, 968 So. 2d 844 (La. App. 2d Cir. 2007) (Mount Mariah Baptist Church v. Pannell’s Associated Electric, Inc., 835 So. 2d 880 (La. App. 2d Cir. 2002))).

Reasonably Prudent Operator - Similar to the case law review in Texas, the concept of a reasonably prudent operator appears in the context of oil and gas and mineral leases. Louisiana Mineral Code 31:122 “requires the lessee to act as a ‘reasonably prudent operator’ based upon the totality of the facts” and allows parties to stipulate what shall constitute reasonably prudent conduct on the part of the lessee. The implied duty imposed on a mineral lessee by La. R.S. 31:122 is also imposed on assignees or sublessees. Rainbow Gun Club, Inc. v. Denbury Res., Inc., 247 So. 3d 844, 848 (La. App. 3d Cir. 2018).

In determining whether a lessee is acting as a reasonably prudent operator, a court must consider the totality of the circumstances bearing on the lessee’s overall operations....” Id. Significantly, the Louisiana Mineral Code is applicable to all forms of minerals. “Thus, because the same code article governs the duties to operate under any mineral lease, be it brine or hydrocarbons, we [Louisiana Supreme Court] find that the interpretation of those duties, should likewise be the same, whether it be for operators of brine or hydrocarbon mines.” Id.

The Louisiana Supreme Court explained that “develop and operate” as related to a lessee’s actions as a prudent operator are terms of art within the oil and gas industry. “‘Develop,’ as used in the industry, ‘contemplates any step taken in the search for, capture, production and marketing of hydrocarbons.’ ‘Operate’ can be defined as any activity leading to the production of oil and gas.” Broussard v. Hilcorp Energy Co., 24 So. 3d 813, 819-20 (La. 2009).

Louisiana’s First Circuit Court of Appeal has held that even though a company was not the “operator” of the facility, the company had a duty to act in a reasonable and prudent manner because it assumed a “hands-on” role in the milling, pressurization and plugging of the well. Thus, even if a company does not hold the title of “operator,” it will be required to act in a reasonable and prudent manner should its actions equate to that of an operator.

WORDS HAVE MEANING

As an increasing number of oil and gas professionals, investors and contract drafters find themselves working in different parts of the energy industry, there are cases where concepts historically specific to oil and gas development activities are copied in an attempt to apply them more broadly. This seems to be the case with the use of a “reasonably prudent operator” standard in commercial contracts for petrochemical facilities and renewable energy projects. As noted above, the “reasonably prudent operator” standard is historically a specific term of art to describe the lessee’s obligations to the lessor under the terms of an oil and gas or mineral lease. The parties should ask themselves what standard of care is appropriate for the particular services being provided.

Even within oil and gas-related agreements, such as gathering and transportation services agreements, management services agreements or transition services agreements, does it make sense to apply a “reasonably prudent operator” standard, which is historically tied to the obligations of a lessee under an oil and gas lease to a party providing services to non-operated properties? Would it be clearer to specifically state what the service provider’s obligations are than to leave it to a judge to import a “reasonably prudent operator” standard onto non-operated properties? Or should it be both? The form AAPL 1989 Operating Agreement provides that, “[o]perator shall conduct its activities under this agreement as a reasonably prudent operator, in a good and workmanlike manner, with due diligence and dispatch, in accordance with good oilfield practice, and in compliance with applicable law and regulation...”

Where a “good and workmanlike manner” standard of care is applied, the parties should think critically before adding modifying terms. Do the parties really want services to be performed at a different standard than the “knowledge, training, or experience necessary for the successful practice of a trade or occupation and performed in a manner generally considered proficient by those capable of judging such work?” If so, should that change the consideration due to the service provider?

When drafting commercial contracts for energy industry operations, management or services, parties should focus on the services being provided and the assets those services relate to, negotiate the proper standard of care in an informed manner and clearly describe that standard in a way that matches up with terms of art under the governing body of law.